

*In original mind there is no this and that - Pure and luminescent, it is without a shadow
It extends freely in all directions - Boston in the West, Seoul in the East*

Transmission poem by Zen Master Wu Bong

On September 24, 2006 Aleksandra Porter received transmission from Zen Master Wu Bong at Warsaw Zen Center and became Zen Master Bon Shim.

DHARMA COMBAT

—I have a question: for many years you have been a dharma master; now that you've achieved the higher and more respected position of Zen Master, now then, how is Zen better than dharma?

ZMBS: You already understand.

—But I'm asking you.

ZMBS: The sky is blue, and trees are green.

—Thank you for your teaching.

ZMBS: How are you, my dharma sister?

—I'm very well, and how are you my dharma sister, or Zen sister?

ZMBS: Whatever you like.

—I have a question: when we read about the history of Zen, since the beginning until today, there are always stories and poems surrounding each enlightenment. Now that you're becoming a Zen Master, what is your enlightenment poem?

ZMBS: You already understand... Oh Buddha, Oh Dharma, Oh Sangha.

—And that's it?

ZMBS: Isn't it enough?

—Oh no.

ZMBS: Go and have some tea.

—Thank you very much, I was so thirsty. Thank you for your teaching.

ZMBS: Hello son.

—Hi mum.

ZMBS: How are you?

—I'm fine, thanks. I have a question: will good and evil ever come to an end?

ZMBS: Cause and effect are always clear.

—And what is the cause and effect?

ZMBS: Isn't it enough?

—Thank you for your teaching

ZMBS: You're welcome.

—Hello.

ZMBS: Hi there.

—When all the creatures in the world will be free and there's only you and I left, what happens then?

ZMBS [laughs]: Come closer... [gives him a hug]

DHARMA TALK

[Raises the Zen stick over her head, then hits the table with the stick.]

Before Buddha appeared in this world, this one thing was pure and clear. So what did Buddha transmit to Mahakashyapa?

[Raises the Zen stick over her head, then hits the table with the stick.]

All of the great teachers have also pointed only at this one great thing. What did they wish to transmit to us?

[Raises the Zen stick over her head, then hits the table with the stick.]

If you want to find it, it is far away from here. But if you don't want to find it, you will waste your life away. So what can you do?

KAAATZ!

When the alarm clock rings in the morning, get up. When you hear the mottak, go to the dharma room. Nothing special.

A long time ago, I heard from Zen Master Seung Sahn: "One after another each thing has it. One after another, each thing is complete." This struck me very hard and I felt that it was what I was missing in my life. Some time later I discovered that this is what is missing in the life of every person. In each of us, there is this original yearning for something pure, clear, luminescent. Some call it true nature, some call it Buddha or God. It is so close to us, but we can't see it.

A long time ago, someone asked Zen Master Un Mun, "Why is it that we are unable to see what is so close to us?" Un Mun answered, "It is because it is so close to us." We are unable to see it, so we try to understand it. But understanding will not bring us closer to it, will not pacify the yearning. We have to experience it. As was said, it is beyond understanding and beyond words. That is why, a long time ago, when anyone asked Zen Master Lin Chi, "What is enlightenment, what is true nature, what is Buddha?" Lin Chi would just respond, "Katz!" To the same question, Zen Master Dok Sahn would just hit the questioner. Gu Ji would just raise his finger. Zen Master Seung Sahn gave us this [hits the table with her hand], but we are unable to believe it. We constantly check whether this is true and who said it is true? We have to believe in this one clear thing, then we save this world from suffering. We also have other obstacles: strong opinions and attachment to our understanding. We are unable to let go of them. We have the feeling that if we let go of them, the whole world will cease to exist. In a way it is true—our world will cease to exist. The world of illusions will cease to exist.

A certain Tibetan teacher by the name of Marpa would teach that everything is illusion. But one day his son died and Marpa cried and cried... One student asked him: "Marpa, why are you crying? You have been teaching that everything is illusion!" Marpa answered: "Yes, everything is illusion and my son's death is the greatest of all illusions." If you see that something is an illusion, it ceases to be an illusion. Then things are just like they are. The sky is blue. When someone is hungry, give him food. If someone is suffering, help him. Only correct function, correct situation. But correct also means
